COLOUR PALETTE GUIDE

Welcome

“We’re excited to introduce you to the 2020 edition of ColourFutures™, which tells the story of how we transform key global trends into inspiring paint colour palettes for the home.

Each year, the Global Aesthetic Center (GAC) invites top design-related specialists from a broad range of disciplines and cultures to share trend insight from around the world. Our colour experts use these findings to build a picture of what consumers are going to want in their homes. Then, from this, the GAC identifies the all-important Colour of the Year and develops colour palettes around it.

In this book, we’ll show you how our versatile Colour of the Year and these beautiful new palettes can be used to transform each room. To bring this to life, we have created a wealth of content – from images and videos to print assets – which you will see online, in store and through our AkzoNobel Brand Center.

We hope you enjoy exploring and using this content as much as we did creating it.”

FOREWORD BY

HELEEN VAN GENT

CREATIVE DIRECTOR, GLOBAL AESTHETIC CENTER, AKZONOBEL

INTRODUCING

THE GLOBAL AESTHETIC CENTER

2020's new colour palettes began their journey at the AkzoNobel Global Aesthetic Center in Amsterdam. For more than 25 years, this has been our studio for trend analysis, colour design and art direction. Led by Creative Director Heleen van Gent, the creative team supports 80 markets around the world in empowering consumers and customers to choose paint colour palettes for their homes with absolute confidence.

In order to deliver beautiful new colour palettes that are perfectly matched to consumers' desires and lifestyle needs, we continually monitor social, cultural and design trends as they emerge all over the globe, gathering unique insights via an international team of design experts. Our colour team then uses this information to help identify the Colour of the Year and create four inspiring palettes around it.

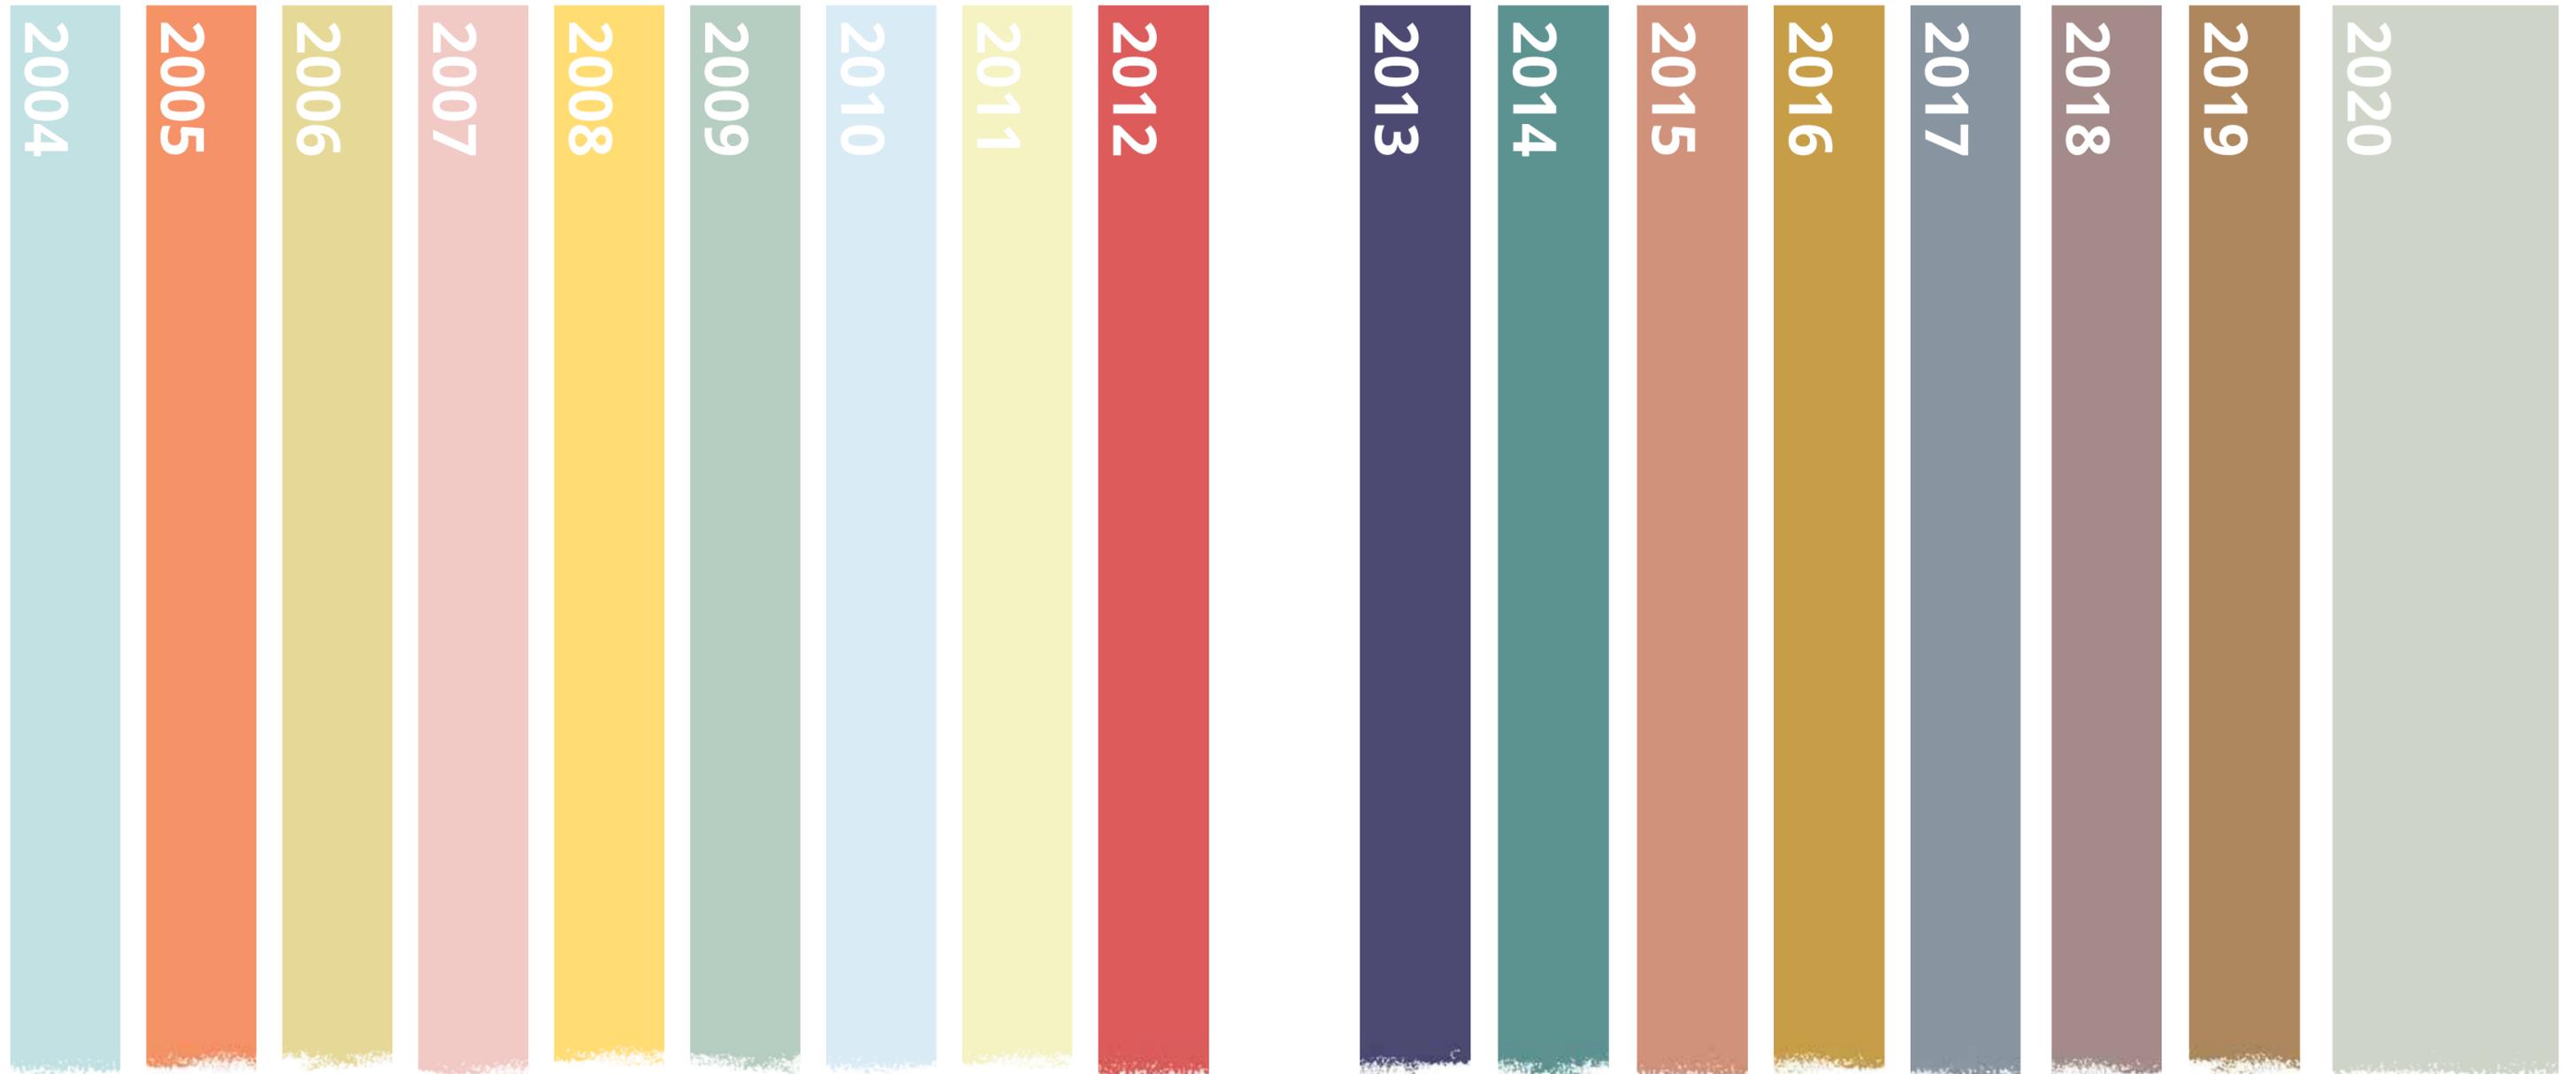

ColourFutures™ is central to the Global Aesthetic Center's work. It allows us to tell the stories behind this year's colours, and create a wealth of content to meet the needs of the media in passing these trends and palettes on to consumers. In tandem with our colour forecasting work, the team creates an array of assets, including hundreds of compelling images that demonstrate how the colour palettes will translate into real people's homes, all over the world.

COLOUR OF THE YEAR 2004-2020

Our journey through the colours that have defined the last 17 years

Each colour we select is designed to have longevity, which is why you'll find the Colour of the Year from the last five years playing a part in the CF20 colour palette.

Looking back at each Colour of the Year, we can see how they help to tell the story of our times. By exploring global cultural and socio-economic trends influencing the way people live, we can pinpoint the colours that consumers will respond to. In 2018, people were experiencing a sense of uncertainty that we responded to with soft and comforting Heart Wood™. Last year, consumers felt ready to let the light back in to their lives, so we chose the soothing and energising Spiced Honey™ as our Colour of the Year.

COPPER ORANGE™

OCHRE GOLD™

DENIM DRIFT™

HEART WOOD™ references the tactile qualities of natural wood and has a soft pink tone that is the essence of 'A Welcome Home'.

SPICED HONEY™ is inspired by the varied tones and properties of honey and truly reflects the optimistic mood of 'Let the Light in'.

TRANQUIL DAWN™ is a soft, fluid shade reminiscent of the colours of the morning sky. It perfectly encapsulates our desire to treasure our most human qualities and give our homes 'The Human Touch'.

THE HISTORY OF COLOURFUTURES™

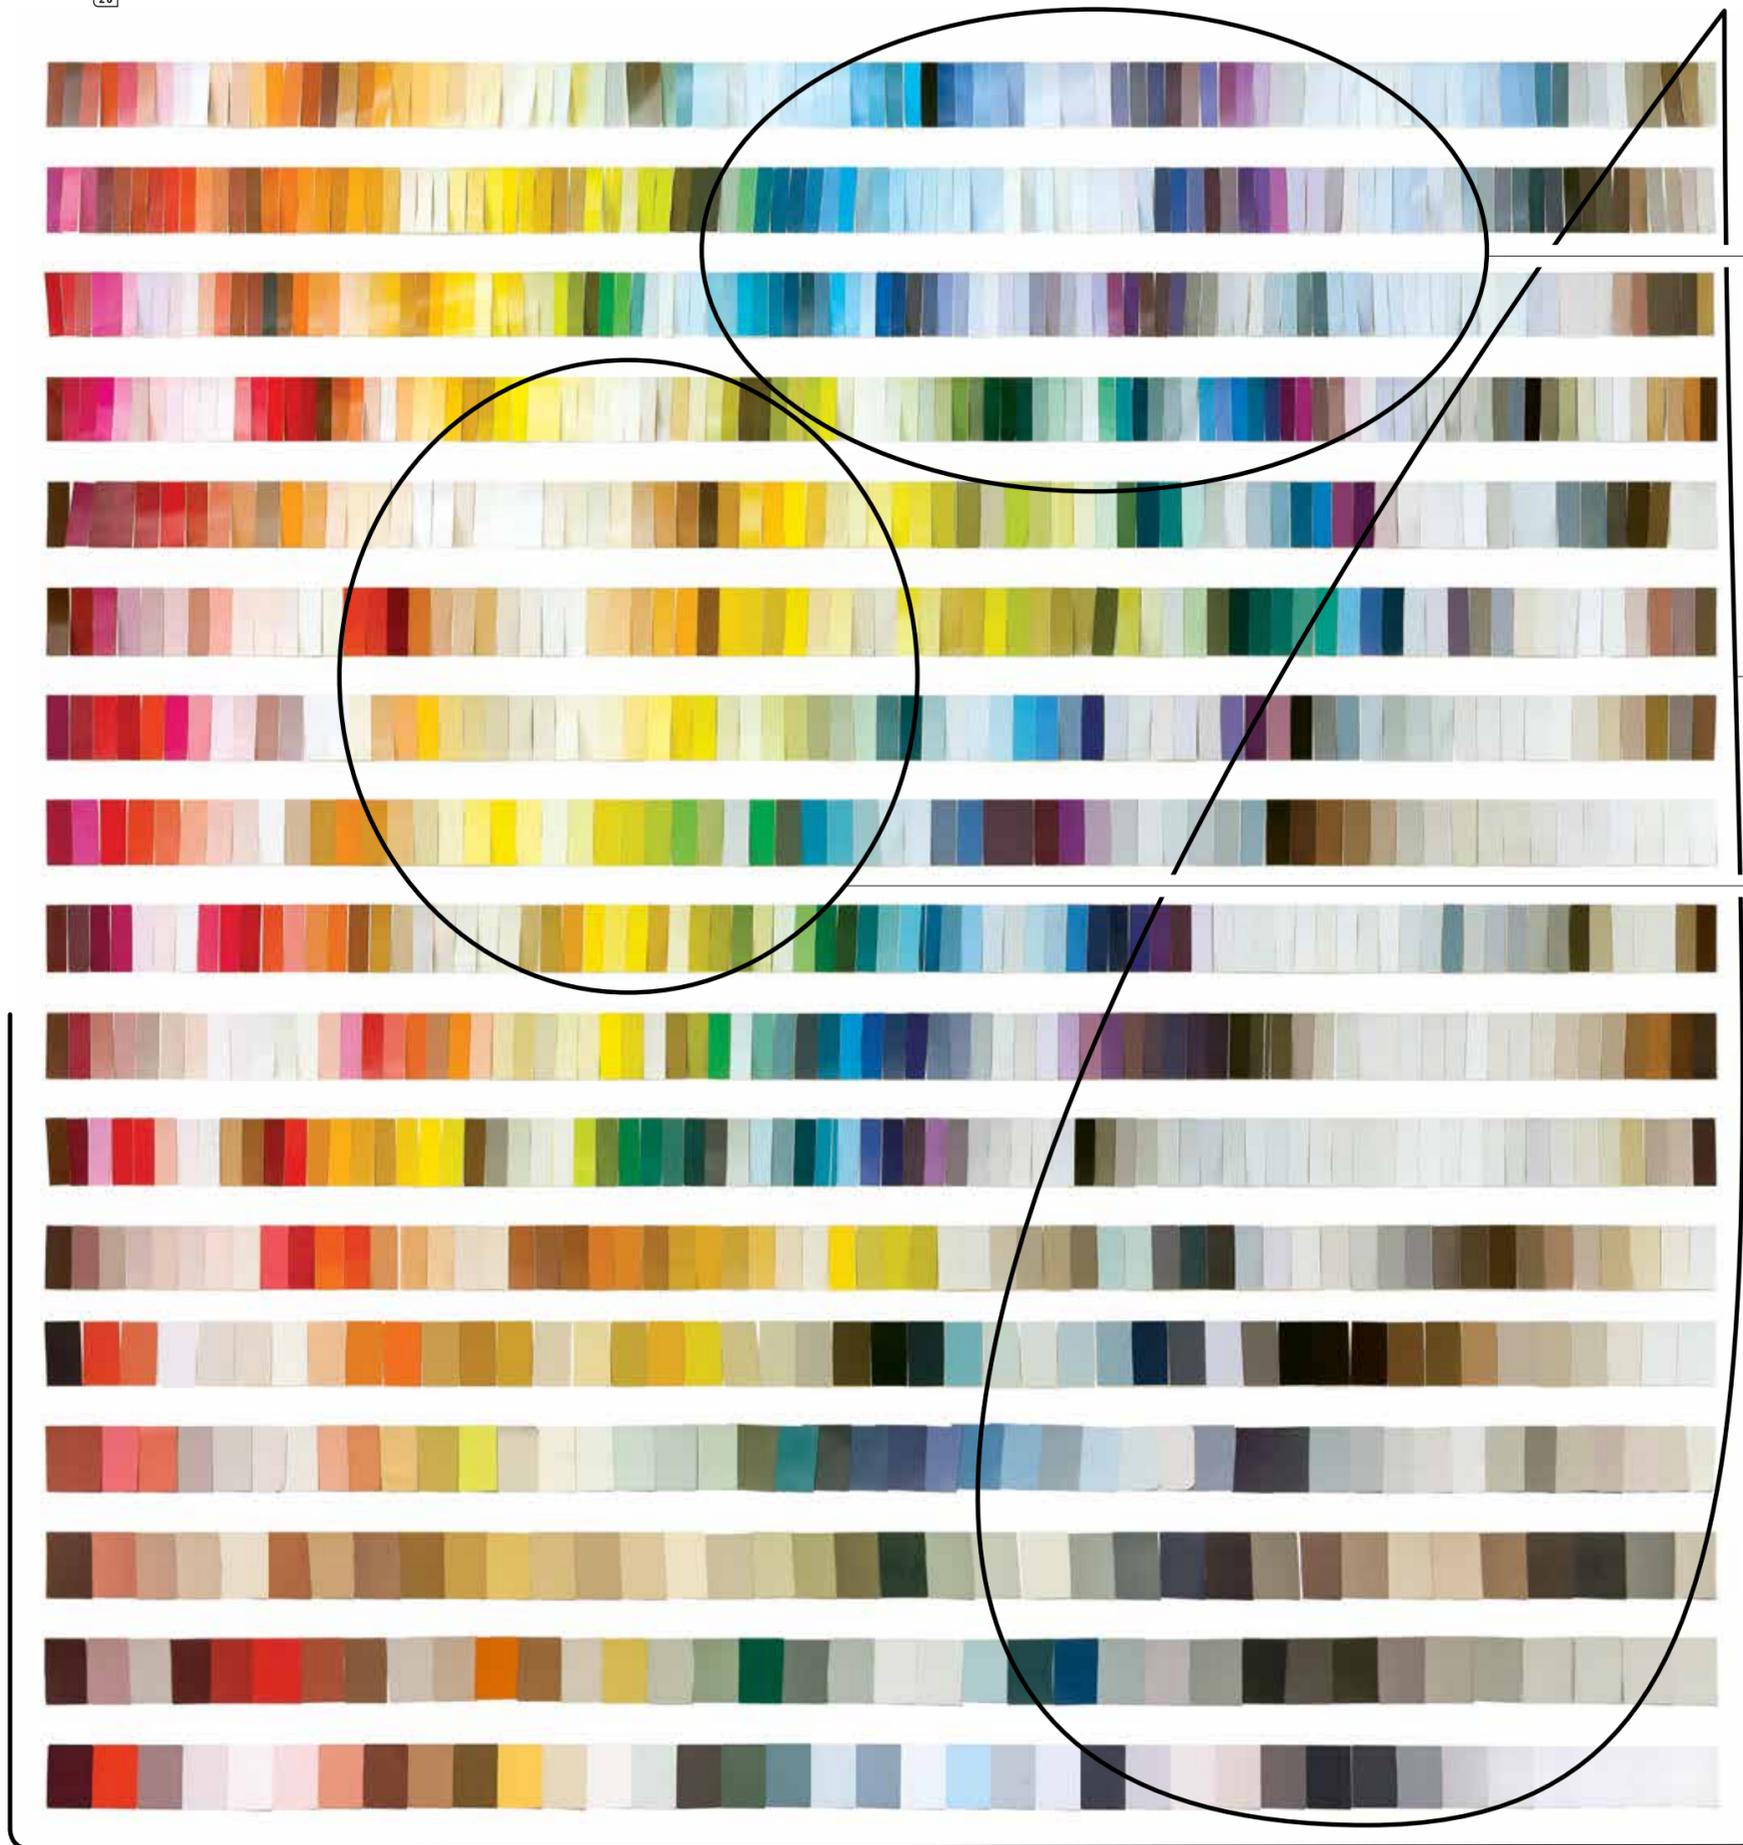

COLOUR ANALYSIS

The evolution of colour trends leading up to 2020

"When you see how our ColourFutures™ palettes have evolved over the years, you can chart the fluctuations in our consumers' appetite for different colours and spot connections with what is going on in the wider world.

Looking at the colours on the right, you will notice that neutrals are becoming more important than ever, with a growing interest in shades on the grey scale. And, nearly two decades on from the very first ColourFutures™, you'll see that we have curated the colours from 100 to 37, making it easier than ever for consumers to select the right palettes for their needs."

HOW IT HAPPENS

OUR GLOBAL TRENDS FORECAST

AkzoNobel continually invests in global colour research as part of our commitment to drive paint expertise forward. Each year, a team of globally acknowledged independent designers, architects, colour creatives and trend analysts assemble at the Global Aesthetic Center in Amsterdam to share their observations and insights with our colour team at an inspiring three-day forecasting session. Here, we examine cutting-edge cultural, design and lifestyle trends, then use this to build a clear picture of the factors that are going to have the biggest impact on our lives in the near future. This helps us define the key consumer trends and the overall mood of the moment. We want to understand which societal, economic and design factors will influence the way our customers and consumers are going to live in the coming years – what keeps them busy? how will they work, relax and socialise? – and how this translates into the built environment.

“OUR EXTENSIVE TREND INSIGHTS ALLOW US TO PREDICT WITH CONFIDENCE WHAT IS GOING TO BE IMPORTANT TO CONSUMERS IN THE COMING YEAR”

Heleen Van Gent

THE TEAM

MEET THE EXPERTS

Around a dozen independent experts join us at the Global Aesthetic Center in Amsterdam, where we build a picture of the key trends that are shaping consumers' lives. The expertise of this group is extensive, with fields ranging from architecture to cultural analysis, technology to design innovation. Each expert begins by sharing their own observations, then we discuss how these various ideas fit together and analyse the insight gathered, looking at where it will take consumers in the coming year and how it will influence their way of living.

THE PROCESS

TRANSFORMING TRENDS INTO COLOUR PALETTES

Following our trend forecast sessions, our in-house colour design team at the Global Aesthetic Center gets to work. By immersing ourselves in these detailed global insights, our team develops a powerful understanding of where consumers are heading, allowing us to devise paint colours to match their needs. We establish a central theme for the year ahead and, with this in mind, carefully identify a versatile Colour of the Year that will respond to consumers' needs and bring the new mood into their homes.

Our colour experts then develop a collection of inspiring palettes around this shade, offering people four different ways of using the Colour of the Year so that consumers can find one that reflects their lifestyle, aspirations and desires. Having devised these colour palettes, our talented team then goes on to create an extensive collection of assets for print and online use to communicate the trends to the media and consumers, as well as to property developers, interior designers and architects around the world.

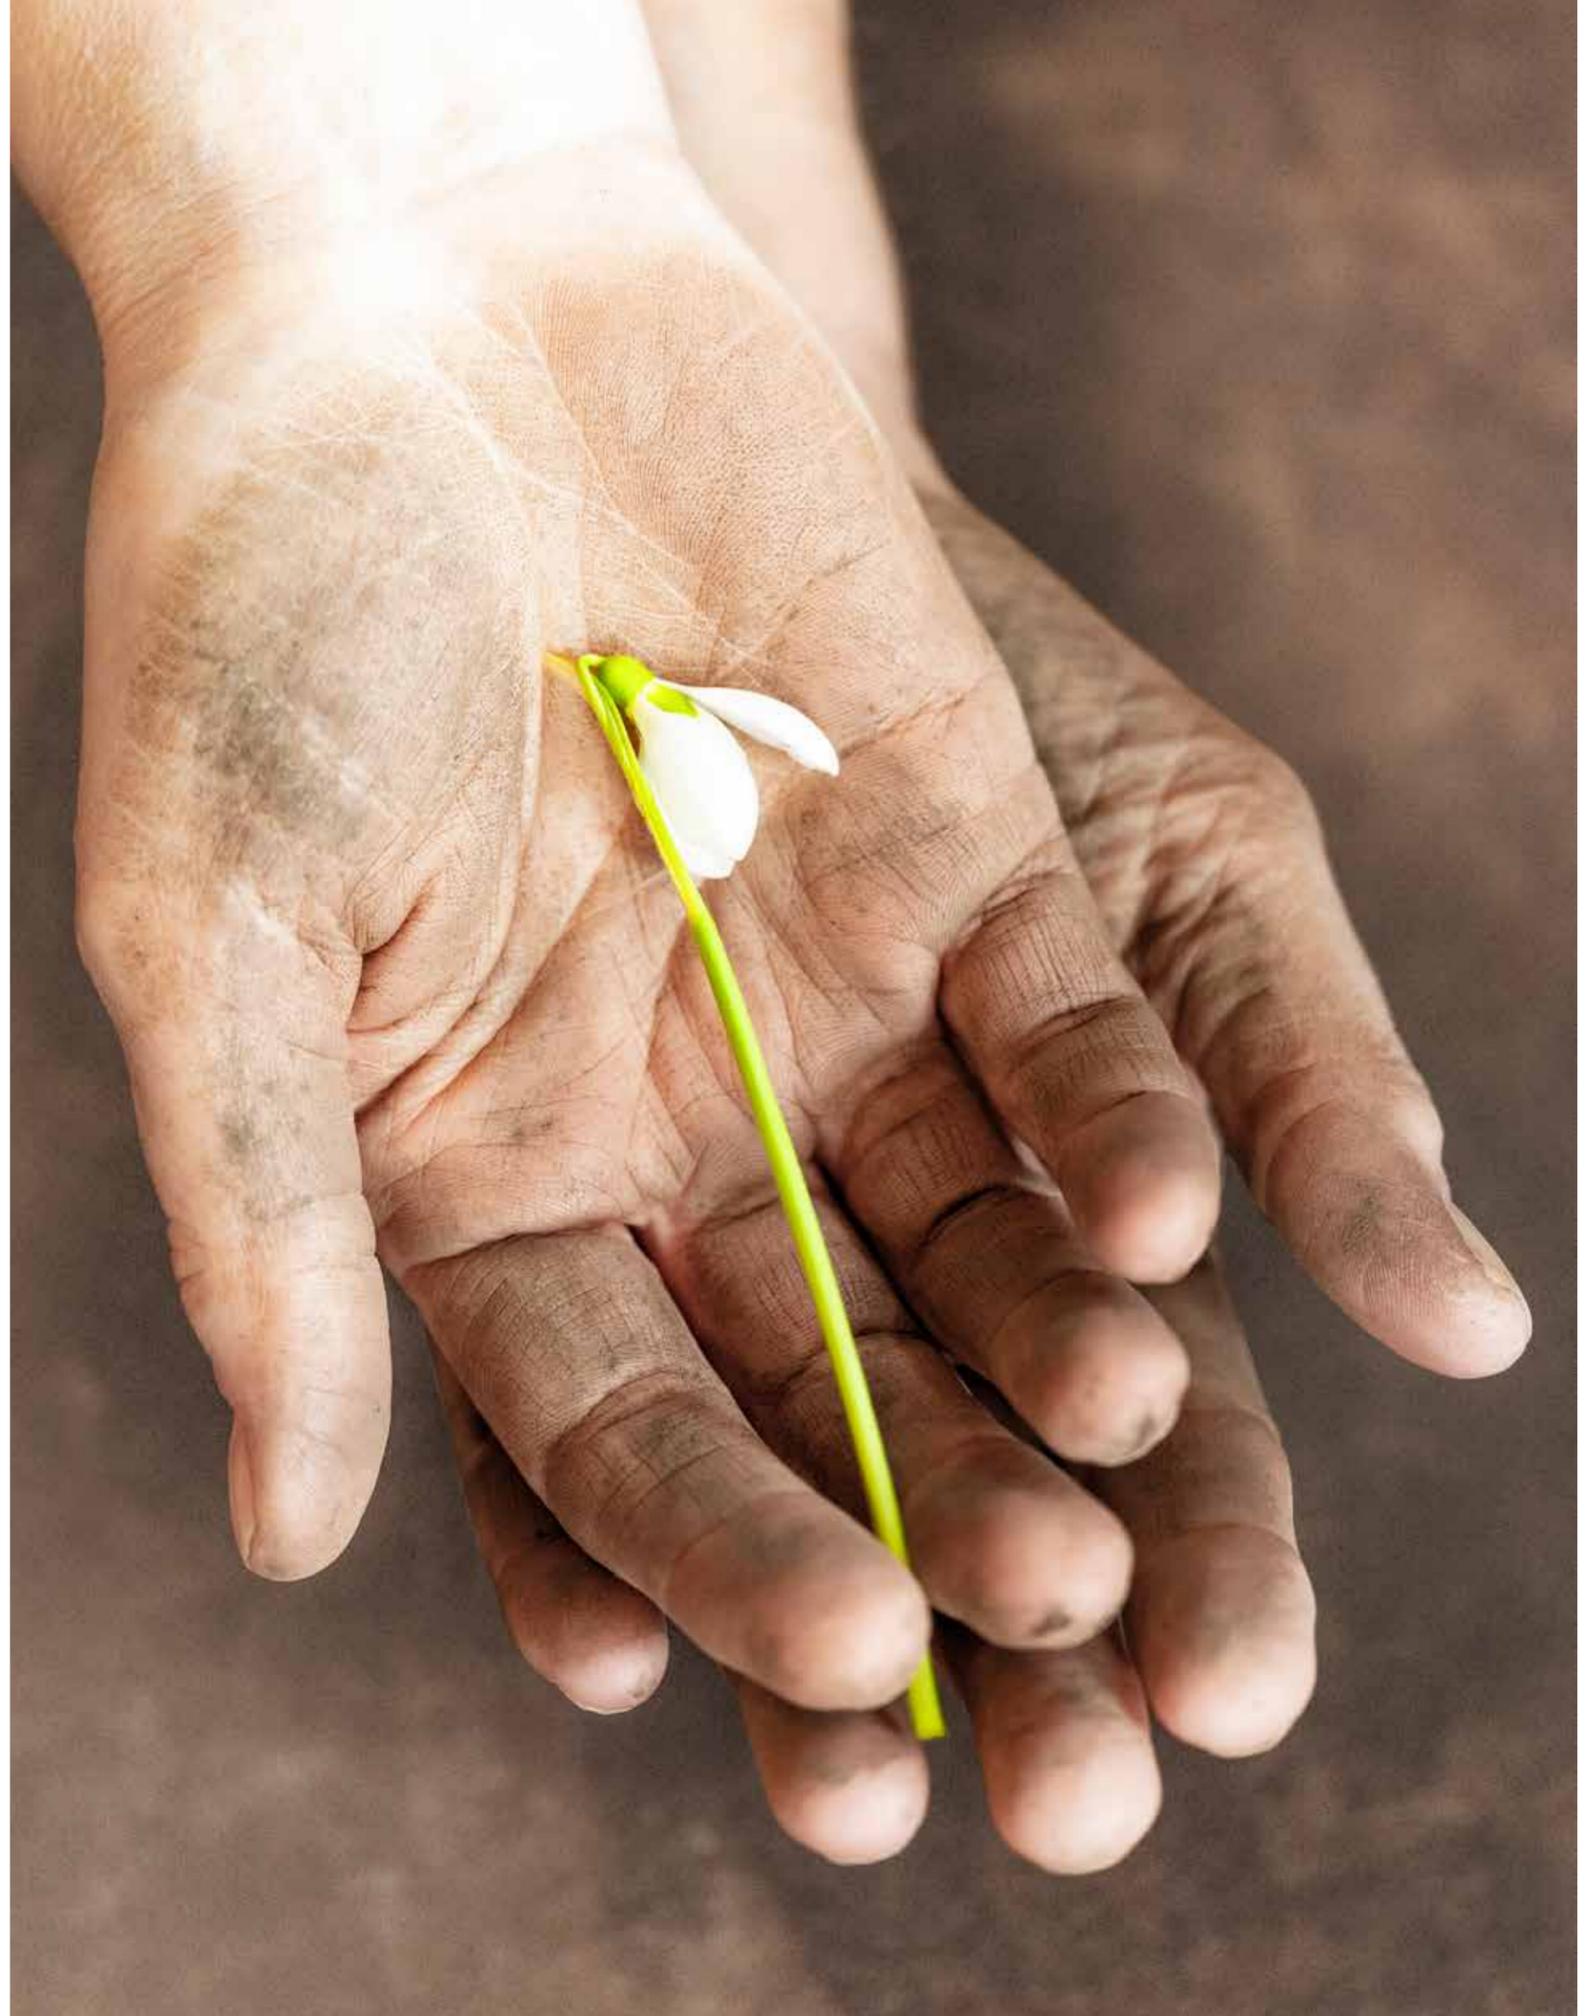

TREND #1

People want to care Modern life and our increasing reliance on technology and social media means we feel disconnected from the things that matter – our relationships, our wellbeing, our communities, the built environment and the natural world. There is a growing desire to make real, meaningful connections – with people, with nature, with our cities – and to ask, what can we contribute to society?

We are keen to rediscover the value of community and its positive role in our mental and physical health. People are embracing the benefits of interacting with, and caring for, one another as well as recognising the importance of self-care; the global wellbeing industry is now worth $4.2 trillion, up 12.8% in the last two years.

In a bid to make our lives feel more 'human', we are seeing the emergence of co-living developments, as well as 'urban villages' with gardens, lakes and even cows and chickens. Where once our vision of the future was of robotic helpmates, people now aspire to be surrounded by water and trees. By taking care of cities and nature, by creating a positive relationship with our environment, we feel we are better humans. By creating homes where we can enjoy good food, restful sleep and contact with the natural world, we are able to nurture the relationships that matter to us.

TREND #2

People want to be playful As we increasingly live our lives through the prism of social media, there's a growing desire to make room for joyful moments and unexpected experiences – to find delight in the real world. This means valuing the imagination, and being open and receptive to finding new ways of challenging outdated thinking.

As an antidote to the constraints of modern life, people want to stop taking themselves too seriously and let their imaginations run wild. We are keen to disrupt the norms and bring a new vibrancy into our existence. We want to understand what it means to feel alive.

(A recent survey suggested that 42% of people are seeking out holiday destinations that make them feel like a child again.*)

Our trend analysts have observed a rise in playful, interactive and immersive experiences as an alternative to more traditional cultural events and exhibitions. There is a desire to break away from our old routines and create stimulating and unexpected environments. The home can be a place that allows us to take pleasure in real-time experiences that delight our senses and make us feel truly alive.

TREND #3

People are seeking meaning Our trend analysts have observed that, in this busy, digitalised world which can feel superficial, we lack depth and meaning. The rapid advancement of technology is making us question our purpose, and with lives lived against a background of constant clamour – both real and digital – it can be hard to feel still, to experience awe.

Our cities are becoming increasingly overcrowded, with the proportion of city-dwellers expected to rise from 55% in 2019 to 66% in 2020. Against this hectic backdrop, there is a growing desire to clear our minds, and our lives, of unnecessary distractions in order to take stock and contemplate what it means to be human.

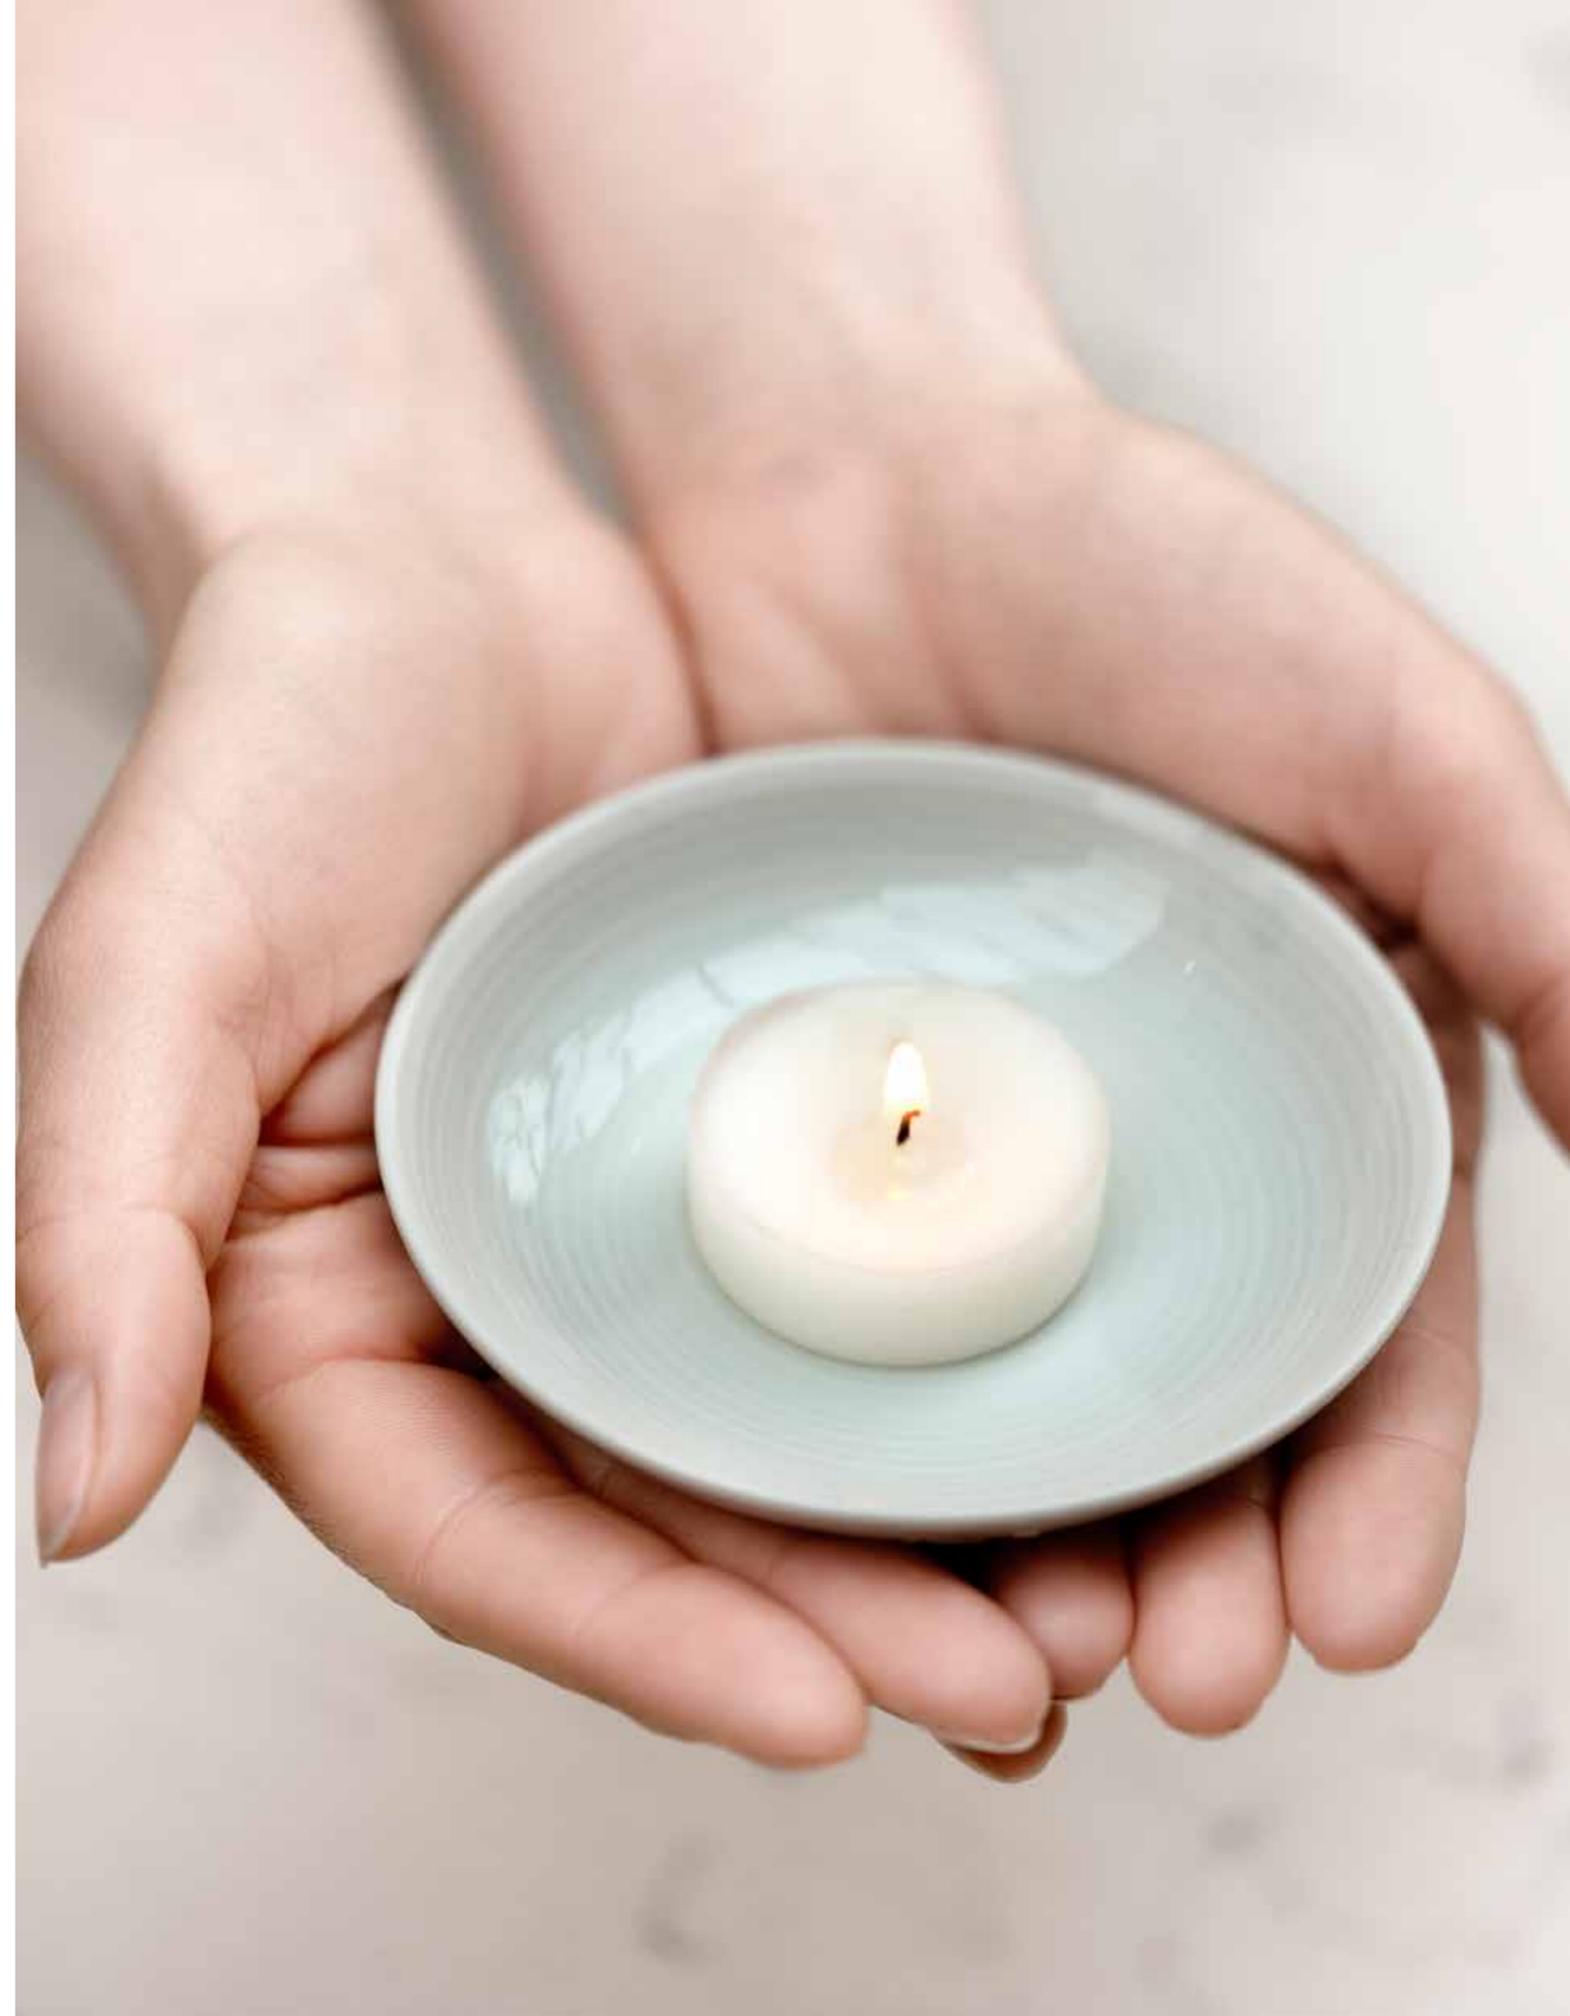

Silence has become the new luxury, with people seeking out rest and repose through remote travel experiences, in 'nap pods' and via tech-free time – 32% of UK and US users say they have closed or deactivated a social media account in the last 12 months.

We are looking for ways in which to bring meaning, awe and wonder to our lives, and seeking 'soul' in what can sometimes feel like a soulless and superficial world.

There is a growing desire for homes where we can live simply and focus on the things we value, without meaningless distractions. We need spaces where we can find stability and be mindful – where we can re-channel our energies and renew our sense of purpose.

TREND #4

People want to be creative With the rise of globalisation, mechanisation and technology, there is a realisation that we are losing the skills of our ancestors. Our capacity for creativity has been diminishing as ever more sophisticated virtual realities loosen our tethers to the real world.

It feels like the right time to ask the fundamental question: what makes us special and different from robots?

According to recent studies, 32% of people believe that artificial intelligence represents a threat to humanity. This has resulted in a growing need for people to express themselves, doing the very thing that robots cannot do - whether that's making music, learning crafts, cooking or growing plants. Insight shows that 60% of people now value experiences over possessions* as we move towards a more creative, less consumerist society. Alongside this quest for greater creativity, we are looking to our heritage and identity to combat the effects of modern life. There is an overwhelming desire to connect with the past, with a huge surge of interest in ancestry-tracing websites. In the home, this translates into a need for spaces where we can express ourselves and tell stories, where we are able to indulge our curiosity, rediscover lost skills and give the past its proper place in our busy lives. We want homes that help determine who we are, that allow us to be individual.

THE 2020 MOOD

This year, it's all about...

WHAT MAKES US HUMAN

Last year, we wanted to “Let the light in” to our lives. And, in 2020, light and clarity are needed more than ever, as we look to new horizons and ask ourselves, what does it mean to be human? People are keen to examine their values and bring new meaning to everyday existence. In an increasingly digitised, superficial world, our global trend research suggests that people are experiencing a desire for positive real-world connections and relationships. We want to take care of ourselves, of each other and the natural world, to learn about our heritage and rediscover lost skills. We feel the need to make room in our lives for joyful and unexpected experiences, for awe and wonder.

HOW THIS TRANSLATES INTO OUR HOMES

We are looking for a place where we can contemplate our future, consider our purpose in this brave new world. Where we can better connect with our friends and family, our surroundings, with nature. Where we can express ourselves, be ourselves. We are looking to give our homes...

“The human touch”

REVEALING THE COLOURFUTURES™ 2020 PALETTE...

Inspired by the clean, mutable shades of the morning sky, Tranquil Dawn™ conveys calm and stability, and reflects the widespread desire for a more meaningful existence. Its fluidity, coupled with the breadth of this palette, allows consumers to use Colour of the Year in a way that reflects who they are, how they want to feel and how they want to live.

This large palette divides up into four smaller palettes that reflect the four trends. Over the next few pages, we will show how these palettes, each representative of a different mood and horizon, can help bring a fresh perspective to people's walls and homes – with the versatile Colour of the Year, Tranquil Dawn™, playing a different role in each palette.

A HOME FOR CARE

CREATING SPACE FOR...
WELLBEING | KINDNESS | EMPATHY | POSITIVE CONNECTIONS

This soft and airy palette enables us to create spaces where we can make time for the relationships that really matter: with ourselves, with our loved ones, with nature, with our homes and with our built environments. The pared-back mix of gentle neutrals, including the Colour of the Year Tranquil Dawn™, is reminiscent of the horizon of a hazy spring morning – where the colours of the dawn flow into one another. There is a feeling of light and space created by simple lines and a relaxed style. Pale wood and suede are used alongside tactile velvets and wool throws to bring warmth to this contemporary look, while silvers, golds, coppers and mother of pearl introduce a precious element. Plants and botanical prints bring the outside in and boost a sense of wellbeing.

A HOME FOR CREATIVITY

CREATING SPACE FOR...
CURIOSITY | EXPLORATION | SELF-EXPRESSION | STORYTELLING

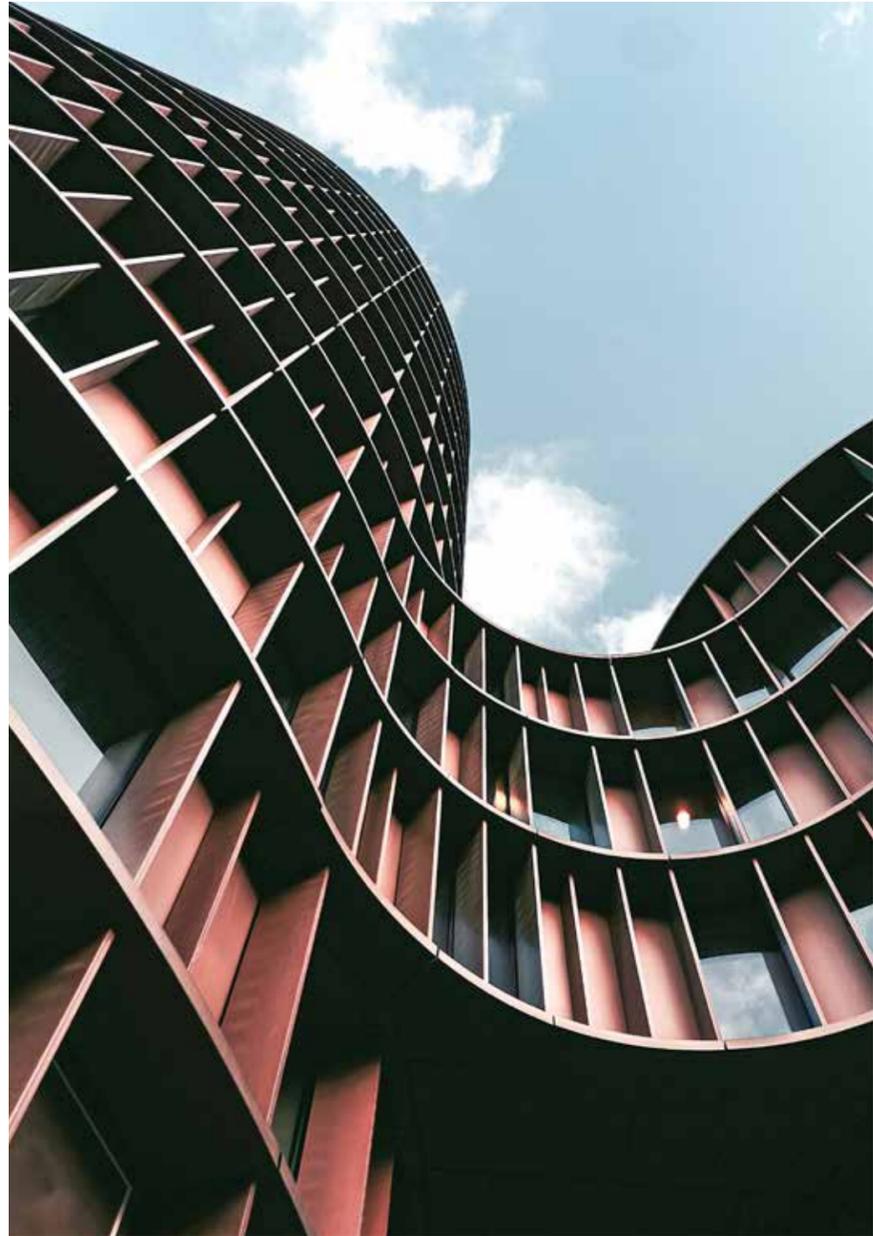

In the creative home, we are able to build our own narrative. We tell stories that blend old and new, taking the past and making it our own. It is where we indulge our curiosity, use our hands to become makers and celebrate perfect imperfection.

The creativity palette is rich and saturated, inspired by the colours of a warm autumn day and full of intense tones, including forest greens and earthy ochres, as well as paler, in-between shades like Colour of the Year Tranquil Dawn™.

This home uses the time-honoured materials of the past – wood, leather and pottery – but in a modern context, alongside painterly florals, printed cottons and hand-knitted throws. Texture and tactility help to create spaces that are moody, atmospheric and eclectic.
